

BLOOD DONOR

Animal research and testing has played a significant role in the development of Hepatitis vaccines. With nearly a 95% success rate, it prevents certain types of Hepatitis from being transmitted by infected blood or blood products. Researchers depend on guinea pigs – and other research animals – in their ongoing quest to prevent, treat and even cure Hepatitis in all its many forms.